KINGPIN

A customer Story

Managing Director and co-founder of international digital marketing consultancy Kingpin, James Foulkes explained why they signed up as an early adopter of Sage Live.

“Having spent 18 months assessing rival systems including FinancialForce.com, NetSuite and Exchequer, Sage Live was less expensive and fitted with the company’s rapid growth pattern” Foulkes explained.

“Spreadsheets weren’t cutting it for us for sales reporting and we wanted to source them from Salesforce. It was a question of which [program] we could integrate with it to get a seamless accounting system.”

Sage Live’s “dimensional” chart of accounts provided the flexibility Kingpin needed to track reports back to individual clients and projects, and could be fed from sales opportunities created in Salesforce. The CRM application’s workflow tools mean that when Kingpin is ready to invoice a job, “We can push a button and the opportunity goes to finance and they can raise the invoice in the client’s local currency. It sounds simple but integrating our front and back office has saved us time and made our life easier,” Foulkes said.

As well as giving Salesforce users the ability to see whether clients have or haven’t paid, if an expense comes in for a particular project the finance team can code it back to the right line within the Sage Live nominal ledger, he added.
